[redacted] seamen disembarking for shore leave in Tientsin were subject to the following regulations:

25X1

- a. Seamen were numbered upon landing. Personal possessions such as fountain pens, wrist watches, and articles of clothing, had to be registered upon disembarkation and accounted for upon re-embarkation.
- b. Only married men with families in the area were permitted to spend the night ashore.¹
- c. Surveillance was limited to suspect individuals. This was in contrast to the practice during the Five-Anti's Movement, when all seamen ashore were frequently followed.
- d. Customs duties had to be paid on native products exported in excess of ten catties.
1. Comment. Visits to relatives in the area were infrequent since such visits often resulted in investigations of the relatives by Communist officials.
